The Essex and Kent Scottish today

The Essex and Kent Scottish remain active in a number of overseas operations, often in areas of active conflict, where they play a vital role in advancing Canada's foreign-policy initiatives. That said, the greater part of their recent activity has involved domestic operations. Severe weather and public health crises have tasked the regiment and other Canadian reserve units with challenging support roles. From natural disaster relief to keeping seniors safe in a time of pandemic, they remain ready to jump into action wherever they are needed. They represent the best of our communities: our sons, daughters, neighbours and friends, from all walks of life.

Dieppe, August 19, 1942. Of the 566 Essex Scottish troops in the Raid, only 55 returned to England, many of them wounded.

It fell to them to defend our values and freedoms, often at a terrible cost

For over 200 years, men and women of The Essex and Kent Scottish have boldly and proudly answered the call to service. It fell to them, in the urgency of the moment, to step forward and defend what all of us today hold dear.

Local troops, first assembled in 1793, were engaged in key battles in the War of 1812 and in both World Wars, including the ill-fated Dieppe Raid. Since then, the Regiment has remained active in conflicts, peacekeeping and peace-enforcing missions around the world. In our hours of need, they have always stood ready to answer our nation's most urgent call.

It falls to us, as a community, to honour their courage

The Government funds only a limited portion of our commemorative initiatives

Many of the activities of The Essex and Kent Scottish are not funded by governments. These include attending commemorative ceremonies overseas, erecting and maintaining monuments here and abroad, and outfitting our popular pipes and drums so they stand ready to attend local parades and commemorations. It falls to us, as a community, to fund these important initiatives. That is why we are embarking on a Fundraising Campaign: to adequately fund our Foundation so that these initiatives can continue in perpetuity.
